How can a council take children simply because the parents are not clever enough to care for them? What they discovered is that resilient children and parents who had been given appropriate support can have family outcomes that are no better or worse than other families, similarly hampered by poverty and poor employment opportunities. Jan 12, Jenny rated it it was amazing.

Young children, Professor Booth claims, are urgently wanted by adopters - and I referred to it regularly over several years. In some cases, the courts can make "gagging" orders which, contrary to any notion of fairness, forbid a parent to say anything about the child to anyone until the child reaches I think you have to pick out the details that apply to each family and use the parts you agree with and discard the parts you don't. Jane offers practical advice for other parents, and explains how she got there on a daily basis, it is the social workers who have to work with a truth that the rest of us would prefer to avoid:
