Make reading a habit for students: We run a "16 classics before you're 16" challenge, where the upper school students attempt to read 16 classic set texts before they finish year 11. I saw a lovely reading wall in a school cafeteria area recently. Modelling is also important as pupils progress from constructing simple sentences. On the positive side, however, the knowledge that adults accumulate over their lifetimes can aid comprehension. In this case the pupil may have become disengaged, or may be finding activities too hard or too easy. At the request of the UO, often in class we can rush students from one piece of writing to the next. Register to save!
