In compliance with the law of the sea, women and children boarded the boats first; only when there were no women or children nearby were men permitted to board. In her memoir, A Titanic Tale wrote that there were only 36 people in the lifeboat she was placed in, barely half as many as it could hold. The second critical safety lapse that contributed to the loss of so many lives was the number of lifeboats carried on Titanic.

The engines were quickly reversed and the ship was turned sharply—instead of The Royal Mail Steamer Titanic was the product of intense competition among rival shipping lines in the first half of the 20th century. Sensing no collision, the lookouts were relieved.
