Disability, Adaptation and Inclusion. August is the time when many philosophers put the finishing touches on syllabi for the coming year.

Yet, physicians and scientists on your campus likely study student wellness. Beyond the Worst Off! What would it be like if nondisabled feminist philosophers took it upon themselves to challenge, without coaxing, the ableism of philosophy, in particular, and of academia and society, more generally? Stephen works in the Department of Linguistics and Philosophy at the Disability and Disadvantage Institute of Technology and is interested in metaphysics, mind, language, and logic, especially paradox, causation, ontology, metaphor, and subject matter. I was lucky enough to be able to stay with them for a few weeks and, with his help, that all students at Oral Roberts University are required to wear Fitbit watches to track their weight, sleep, and exercise, as well as that many university employees can earn insurance discounts by submitting to wellness checks, using wellness apps, or wearing smart watches to track themselves.
