The guitar is more sensitive and intimate than almost any other instrument, and therefore demands from the composer great imagination and feeling for colour – especially since it is nearly always solo, and succeeds or fails purely on its own. This is possibly because they were not allowing worries about playability. The quintet consists of flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn. Defining the top end of a clarinet's range is difficult, since many advanced players can produce notes well above the highest notes commonly found in method books.
