Vulnerability highlights the inherent problems with our interconnectedness; while we enjoy the easy and constant flow of information and ideas, at the same time, we leave ourselves open to security breaches and systems failures.

It is a particularly interesting article in the modern context, where inform plan seems to push libraries toward behaving like businesses, but I think this would restrict access and introduce new economic, cultural, and political problems. He argues that libraries must innovate to stay alive and that change is happening so quickly that it often appears "chaotic."
