This poem will forever be one of my favorites from Gwendolyn Brooks, as I hope it will be for you. I could feel it deep in my bones immediately.

To her, he is not just any boy, now especially after he has died. I drove home, tired and seeing, I did not take him. He was looking up, across the alley at the back door, his expression defiant. I think he was just for me. In the beginning of November, my boy stopped making eye contact with me entirely.
