The extent to which HE succeeds, however, depends on many factors. This is not Even if universities and schools work together to try and raise the achievement of poor children as they progress through the education system, this will take time; and, in the meantime, there already exists a more immediate potential solution, namely the contextualised admissions to which we referred earlier. One email for each search. Of course academic achievement is not the only determinant of HE participation and hence raising the achievement of poor children and using contextualised admissions systems are not the only solutions.
