I am a bachelor, and the ordinary chances of a fire in a private residence do not equal those in a public building where there are thousands of tenants. Townsend, "you have raised up the figure of forty years ago. The elderly person was a well-known banker who had retired from business, and he had sent for the detective who had just entered his presence. It was, however, a remarkable incident. What I say as concerns myself is a case of inexcusable negligence. I would have thought the man crazy, but as he named the different amounts he laid the vouchers before me, and at a glance I could see that they were all genuine.

This singular statement of the man and his final propositional almost took my breath away. He stated, he became very thoughtful — indeed, he said to the banker: .
